Overview: This activity provides an opportunity to review and present what is relevant to primary care and advance experience about up to date information applicable to day-to-day practice. There exists the disparities in access to pain care among different groups, the need to train providers in pain medicine and the need for utilization of evidence based policy regarding use and diversion. There also exists the need to raise awareness of chronic pain and somatic pain as true diseases to prevent stigmatization and discrimination as well as to prevent under-treatment. Participants will recognize the importance of managing chronic pain in non-cancer patients. This activity will also review judicious use of narcotic medications.

Who should attend? Residents in training, fellows, medical students and other interested health care professionals at UTSW and Community primary care.
